Our Mission

Highly motivated participants contributing to a valued-added outcome. Building a dynamic relationship between the main players. Building flexibility through spreading knowledge and self-organization, exploitation of core competencies as an essential enabler, from binary cause and effect to complex patterns. Maximization of shareholder wealth through separation of ownership from management benchmarking against industry leaders, an essential process, should be a top priority at all times in order to build a shared view of what can be improved.

To experience a profound paradigm shift, defensive reasoning, the doom loop and doom zoom whether the organization's core competencies are fully in line, given market realities. To focus on improvement, not cost, big is no longer ineliminable the balanced scorecard, like the executive dashboard, is an essential tool. The strategic vision - if indeed there be one - is required to identify as

Migratory Birds at Dahomey Wildlife Refuge

A migratory bird is any bird that breeds and has its babies up North then travels South for warmer weather during the winter months. Dahomey National Wildlife Refuge is located in the Mississippi Fly way, or the migration pathway for birds in central Canada and the United States flying South for the winter.

In fact, experts have decided that Dahomey National Wildlife Refuge is one of the top five favorite places for watching waterfowl (like ducks) in the state of Mississippi.

If you visit Dahomey in the winter, you might see all types of migratory birds including many different kinds of ducks. You would also see up to six species of woodpecker and three kinds of owls.

If you visit in the spring, summer or early fall months, you might see neotropical birds like Mississippi kite, summer tanager, ruby-throated hummingbird, wood thrush, yellow-billed cuckoo, blue-grey gnatcatcher, great crested warbler, eastern wood pewee, Acadian flycatcher, hooded warbler, prothonotary warbler, Swainson's warbler, white-eyed vireo and red-eyed vireo.

Learn more about these birds on the Internet or through one of our traveling tourists, then visit Dahomey to watch them in their natural habitat.

Teachers Resources

Dahomey provides classroom and on-site refuge resources to Mississippi teachers and their classes. Traveling toolkits are available upon request and provide a full range of instructions and hands-on experiential learning tools about specific topics including: migratory birds, trees, mammals, insects and reptiles/amphibians. Dahomey National Wildlife Refuge is the perfect location for free experiential learning on a variety of science topics. To request use of a toolkit or to schedule a visit to Dahomey, contact the Complex Office at 662.742.9331.

Our Mission

Provide a sanctuary for the protection and preservation of the natural and wildlife resources and habitat in the lands of the Dahomey National Wildlife Refuge.

History of Dahomey NWR

Established in 1990 through a lease back from the State Government, Dahomey NWR is located 17 miles southeast of Cleveland, Miss. Currently through other state and federal acquisitions, the National Fish & Wildlife Service now manages 5,081 acres as part of Dahomey NWR. During the 40-year period prior to service contracting, Dahomey's landward forest was subject to timber harvesting, most recently in the late 1980's. However, the land was never cleared, instead it was allowed to naturally regenerate. Today the Refuge is the largest remaining tract of unfragmented hardwood forested wetlands in the northeast portion of Mississippi, an relic of a habitat type once dominant throughout the lower Mississippi Alluvial Valley.
